This one very not good!

By Steve

Absolutely atrocious English. This book was not written by someone with English as their first language. No pictures and a rough read. Looked to me like someone hobbled information from other books to write this. I simply couldn't make it through this one, there are grammatical errors in almost every paragraph.

Print-on-demand drivel, and so many false stars...

By J. Williamson

This book is...bad. The content is okay, I may have learned a few things, but there are no illustrations or diagrams. In my opinion, diagrams are particularly important in a topic involving piping, construction, water levels, all that good stuff.

The writing is perfectly abysmal, a chopped-up style like a bad high school essay ("what I am about to tell you is..." "I hope you now understand that..." Or one of those click-bait how-to articles mostly copied from Wiki.

Strange, but the gibberish syntax, "English as a second language" grasp of usage, spelling, and homonyms is v-e-r-y similar to the five-star reviews that artificially inflated this poorly written, ill-thought waste of $16. So if you want a sense for the writer's fourth-rate style, sort these reviews by number of stars. I feel cheated.

Poorly written book

By Paul

Quite disappointing book about such interesting subject. First, Chapters 5 & 6 would benefit from pictures or drawings of individual hydroponic systems, but there is not a single illustration! Second, there are lots of basic typos and misinterpretations, such as P stands for phosphorus, not phosphate, TDS is Total Dissolved Solids, not 'Total Desired Salts' and low pH has high hydrogen content, not low as the author suggests. Third, recipes for nutrient mixtures don't make any sense: for example on page 89, mixture of all salts, yielding 256 pounds would be hard to mix with four gallons of water and would definitely not yield 4 liters after mixing. The books like this should not be issued without editing by at least one expert, knowledgeable in the field.
