Over the years, Sudha Murty has come across some fascinating people whose lives make for interesting stories and have astonishing lessons to reveal. Take Vishnu, who achieves every material success but never knows happiness; or Venkat, who talks so much that he has no time to listen. In other stories, a young girl goes on a train journey that changes her life forever; an impoverished village woman provides bathing water to hundreds of people in a drought-stricken area; a do-gooder ghost decides to teach a disconsolate young man Sanskrit; and in the title story, a woman in a flooded village in Odisha teaches the author a life lesson she will never forget.

The Day I Stopped Reading...

By Dileep Vangasseri

I do not know in which category this book belongs to. If they are short stories, they do not classify as "readable". If you want to know about author's life experiences, you may like to read it (I would rather read an autobiography then!). But do not expect much from this book other than some description about some life events that may or may not be of your interest. Some of the plots had scope for a good writing..but author often failed to represent them well. Most often, as one of the other reviewer commented, the plot ended up as describing about the author /author's activities itself. I often felt that I was reading the daily diary of the author...

Experiences I too experience

By Suresh Belgundi

I have read few of these stories in Kannada language. Reading again, I felt that Sudha Murthy is a simple writer whose writings can be read by all ages.

In one of her stories, "Too many questions", she expects a gift in the end of that story. A philanthropist never expects such. May be writing has been in such a way. Many stories have context of people coming to her asking for financial help. When you have started it, obviously the needy or greedy comes to you. Keep on helping without analysing much.

These are real life stories

By Kindle Customer

I have done reading in hours, nevertheless the stories are real and truly inspiring. Many have all the comforts and luxuries but always complain about 'not haves'. Coming from humble background, these stories really touched with me.
